

How do you know when you've found a great price?

Our general rule is, you should stock-up when an item is 70% off or more. But this rule isn't totally universal. Toothpaste, deodorant and body wash should never be stockpiled unless they're $0.50 or less (for high quality name brands). On the other side, some items may be more difficult to find on sale. When jam, almond butter or syrup are on sale, even maybe 50% off, I stockpile for at least 6 months. Sometimes it just depends on the product and how often your family uses it.

Please bear in mind that it's very difficult to give one set of prices that will be accurate for every person in every region of the country. We hope you'll use our list as a loose guideline. If you live in an area that routinely doubles coupons up to $1.00 in value, you will likely find better prices than those we have listed. If you live in an area that does not ever double any coupons, you will typically pay slightly more than the prices we have listed.

Whatever the reason, we're hoping if you need a little guidance knowing when to stock-up, you can use our new symbols as a guide. This symbol  indicates a decent stock up price. You may want to stock up for the next couple months on these products. When you see this symbol , time to pull out the stops and get yourself stocked for the winter!
